Sport at all ages, benefits for all

The link between sport and health is a cornerstone of all EU policies in this field. Physical activity, practiced at any age, is a tool to increase people healthy, contributes to maintaining self-sufficient living conditions, improves agility, balance and coordination, prevents chronic diseases and, therefore, leads to a decrease of health costs for the whole society. The topic will be the focus of EMAF seminars: researchers and experts from all around Europe will join Ancona on Wednesday, April 15th bringing their know-how and experiences. The whole morning will be dedicated to scientific researches on the effects of sport on physical and mental well-being in adulthood, while in the afternoon the social benefits of sport will be at the core of the discussion. Professor Nicola Silvaggi, athletics coach at international level, scientific coordinator of Officina dello Sport and teacher of training theory and methodology at the University of L’Aquila will coordinate the scientific sessions.

The researches

During EMAF Festival, two researches, anticipated during the press conference for the project presentation, will also be deepened. The first one, titled "Health and Movement" was conducted by Officina dello Sport under the coordination of Nicola Silvaggi: the study involved around two hundred people in Ascoli Piceno between the ages of 65 and 93 with the aim of demonstrating the usefulness and advantages of a regular exercise across the entire lifecycle. Results demonstrate a greater physical efficiency of people practicing physical activity in line with other recently published studies and reports at EU level. The second research was carried out by Marco Gervasi, Davide Sisti, Stefano Amatori, Marco Andreazza, Piero Benelli, Piero Sestili, Marco Bruno, Luigi Rocchi and Anna Rita Calavalle of the Department of Biomolecular Sciences at the University of Urbino “Carlo Bo”. The study was carried out during the European Master Indoor Championships held in Ancona in 2016, through the monitoring of the tone and muscle elasticity of 390 athletes. According to the results, muscle tone, elasticity and stiffness change with aging but physical activity can delay the effects on muscle aging. Starting from these results, the University of Urbino “Carlo Bo” and Officina dello Sport will conduct other studies and tests on the athletes during EMAF Festival.
